I've been obsessed with the book Happy City. The thesis is that you can design cities around people or traffic but you can't do both. It talks about how the mayor of Bogota, Colombia made an effort to make Bogota the happiest city on the planet. He largely did that by first making it illegal to commute into the city more than 3x/wk, increased public transportation, bike & walking trails, and parks. I think MKE has a lot of good things happening and there are lots of improvements that could be made as far as zoning to have walkable stores with all necessities. We ought to make our neighborhoods like that. Any way I urge everyone in this room to read Happy City.
