Abele Chief of Staff George Aldrich to Leave Post Next Month

MILWAUKEE – Milwaukee County Executive Chris Abele announced Friday that his chief of staff, George Aldrich, will be leaving the executive's office next month.

“George has been a key advisor in helping to implement my vision for Milwaukee County and was instrumental in working with me to build a professional staff and experienced cabinet,” Abele said. “I deeply appreciate his advice during my challenging first months in office and wish him the best in future endeavors. You couldn't ask for a more loyal and hardworking counselor.”

“While I have thoroughly enjoyed working with Chris, it was always my intention to look for other opportunities once his leadership team was in place and his first budget process was completed,” Aldrich said. “I'm proud to have played a role in his early success as county executive.”

Aldrich is a former campaign manager for former U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold. He also played major roles in Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett's 2002 Democratic gubernatorial campaign, the 2001 campaign of former Superintendent of Public Instruction Elizabeth Burmaster and the 2000 Wisconsin campaign of Democratic presidential candidate Al Gore.
