Sheriff Clarke Named FrontPage Magazine's Man of the Year and 'America's Sheriff'

Milwaukee, WI – Sheriff David A. Clarke Jr. was named FrontPage Magazine's Man of the Year on Thursday, in an article declaring that he has become "America's Sheriff." FrontPage Magazine is an online publication of the David Horowitz Freedom Center. Sheriff Clarke was recognized as the "one man who has emerged as a passionate and articulate spokesman for law enforcement" in the post-Ferguson war on police.

Sheriff Clarke said, "I am honored to receive recognition for my work in defending the American Police Officer. I share this designation with every law enforcement officer who puts on a uniform and serves their community. Other than wearing the uniform of the US military, there is no higher calling or honor."

FrontPage Magazine states, "Sheriff Clarke came running to the rescue as the courageous face of a beleaguered law enforcement community. In interviews and speeches, he spoke the hard truth without a hint of political correctness."

The article notes that the sheriff "emerged as a national figure of unquestionable moral authority." The sheriff was selected as their Man of the Year because "Sheriff Clarke rides tall with a call for personal responsibility and individual freedom.... We stand with the courage and commitment shown by one man. By taking a stand, Sheriff Clarke has become more than the Sheriff of Milwaukee County. He has become America's Sheriff. His leadership is an inspiration to all of us to take a stand in our professions and in our community for our values, our freedom and our country."

Past recipients include The American Police Officer, Ted Cruz, The Men Who Gave Their Lives in Benghazi, Gen. David Petraeus and Allen B. West.
