The Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) has identified four major dimensions that support a life in recovery:

1. Health: Overcoming or managing one’s mental health and/or substance use condition(s) or symptoms. For everyone in recovery, this means making informed, healthy choices that support physical and emotional well-being.
3. Purpose: Participating in meaningful daily activities, such as a work, school volunteering, taking care of family, or creative projects. Developing independence, income and resources that help someone be a part of society.
4. Community: Having relationships and social networks that provide support, friendship, love and hope.

CCS is dedicated to helping all individuals who participate in our programs succeed in each of these areas.
